

ASVIC, Engineering Software Company launches new site in North America

CHARLESTOWN, AUSTRALIA March 27, 2010

Australian-based CAD company, ASVIC Software Inc. announced its new site in the U.S. to represent its award winning Mech-Q Engineering Software at CadAvenue.com. The new website also features other related add-ons and CAD applications, including IntelliCAD and AutoCAD LT.

"Many of our clients are based in the U.S. and Canada so CadAvenue.com is something we have been planning for some time" states Victor Abela, president of ASVIC Software, "We are really looking forward to providing premium local support for all our North American clients."

CadAvenue has also added a new AutoCAD LT add-on called CADSTA Tools which is now fully compatible with 64 bit operating systems running AutoCAD LT. CADSTA is a LISP enabler which is bundled free with Mech-Q for AutoCAD LT.

CadAvenue.com also offers a fresh look and feel that focuses on tips and "how to" videos on Mech-Q and CAD related software. The site also includes a forum area for user questions and related discussions for their users.

Many free try out versions are available from the website www.cadavenue.com or you can contact them below:
